

SAVE MONEY AND IMPROVE EFFICIENCY

Six Questions to Ask if You Are Considering Outsourcing

Industrial Manufacturers with high-intensity operating environments are always trying to find new ways to improve their core business. But while they pursue this goal, they may struggle to get the most out of their facilities' services, especially given rising maintenance & labor costs. That's why companies with production, warehousing & distribution space should consider outsourcing their maintenance and repair work as well as their overall facility service needs. This results in significant savings while increasing efficiency, innovation, and safety. Additionally, outsourcing facilities services allows organizations to focus on their core business, enabling the team to proactively maintain a competitive advantage.

Is your organization interested in outsourcing? Our team of experts has identified six questions you should consider when weighing whether to outsource your manufacturing and facilities service needs.

1 Are you looking to improve efficiency and optimize your production equipment and your building's overall facility assets?

Whether your facility is properly functioning can greatly affect your organization's ability to achieve its goals. An outsourced facilities service provider understands this and will help you reach and maintain operational excellence throughout your facility.

An outsourced facilities service provider will have a team of subject matter experts who ensure that their front-line staff members implement the best and most efficient practices, are trained in the latest safety procedures, and can implement new, innovative technologies. Additionally, executive-level staff will offer specialized business and market knowledge unavailable within most organizations.

If something goes wrong at your facility, an outsourced facilities service provider will respond quickly and provide you with a comprehensive solution backed by a technology-enabled and highly effective workforce.

2 Are you interested in new, innovative technologies?

It can be challenging to stay up to date with the latest innovations in facilities management. An outsourced facilities services provider can walk you through these innovations. They can help you decide which enhancements are most suitable for your facility: From sensor-based long-distance monitoring of your PLCs, to AI and machine learning tools, to autonomous robotics.

3 Are you concerned about your facilities' maintenance costs?

If you don't have a well-thought-out plan for addressing your maintenance needs, an outsourced facilities service provider can help. A facilities service provider can minimize the high costs of emergency repairs and equipment replacement through effective day-to-day service and implementing new, innovative technologies. A Preventative, Predictive, and Precision-focused productive maintenance program does not need to break your bottom line when appropriately addressed with the right facilities partner.

4 Are you interested in sustainability initiatives?

Now more than ever, as part of your organization's ESG initiatives, companies are focused on implementing sound sustainability policies that improve the environment, including IAQ (Indoor Air Quality), surface disinfection, and reducing your carbon footprint at their facilities. The right outsourced facilities service provider will develop a sustainability policy to fit your facility's goals and needs, meet operational standards, and maintain all relevant environmental records.

5 Are you using best practices?

The manufacturing and distribution industry is changing rapidly. Hence, it's easy for your facilities team to fall behind on the latest skills and techniques. Additionally, organizing large-scale training might not be feasible, as it would require much of your limited time. An outsourced facilities service provider has the time, resources, and expertise to stay abreast of industry best practices and can quickly implement them at your facility.

6 Are you seeking to lower costs and increase productivity?

Facility services don't have to be one of your larger expenses. Increased productivity can occur through effective staff management, the implementation of best practices and new technologies, and cost benefits associated with the purchasing power of an extensive business portfolio. An outsourced facilities service provider that executes a total cost of ownership program can cut costs by leveraging the critical mass of all resources and service categories to improve efficiency, innovation, and safety.
